Example: The Introduction to Supervision and Employment Law allowed me to evaluate my self-learned management style and identify areas of my style which were not effective. I learned how to identify specific employee situations, think about how I normally would react to the situation and reflect on how applying the knowledge I had gained in this course might improve the outcome. After trying new management approaches I would evaluate the results and further modify my management techniques. The Employment Law section of this training allowed me to place another layer of facts around each decision I made.
